Time travel is the main topic of the TV series Outlander. Even if the principal subject is time travel, this story is filled with romance, sorrow, fear, hate and a bunch of mixed feelings that captive the viewer from the first scene. Outlander is a TV series based on a series of historical books, written by the American writer Diana Gabaldon.

Having gone to war, the main character, a nurse, Claire, and her husband Frank Randall decide to go on their second honeymoon in an attempt to rebuild a marriage deteriorated by the war.

Frank is a historian that finds this holiday as an opportunity to research about his ancestors, in particular, an enigmatic captain called Jack Randall. This general is also known as 'Black Jack', named gained by his non-conventional ways to obtain information and make justice. The series is located in the highlands of Scotland. A place where Claire finds an alignment of rocks that transports her 300 before, to a time when the English army under the command of captain Jack Randall fights against the rebel Scottish highlanders. Just after Claire arrives, her integrity is threatened by captain Jack but is saved by a Scotsman just to be kept captive by this Scottish rebels.

Claire and the rebels travel to Castle Leoch, ruled by the chief of the McKenzie clan. There, she became a healer and the circumstances force her to marry one of the Scotsman, Jimmy, the most wanted Scottish rebel. He has become the most wanted due to a series of encounters with captain Jack who has destroyed his back by giving him a series of lashes. The view of this punishment has killed Jimmy's father. During the first season, captain Jack becomes his most hated foe because of his father dead and because captain Jack threatens repeatedly Jimmy's and Claire's lives and integrity.

The second season has just come out and it promises a lot of more action than the first one.
